

Ready Freddy Survival Pack

By Will Morgan

This was probably the toughest assignment I think I have been given; pick my favorite item that I depend on the most when I am out on an expedition, wheeling, or on a camping trip. Considering the fact that when I am out on any of these excursions I am in or have my Jeep with me, I immediately went in that direction and began to think about which of the things that are in or on my Jeep that I would not want to leave home without. My American Express of gear if you will.

After much thought, it occurred to me there's "one thing" I wouldn't want to be without should my very worst case scenario ever happen. A product that could prove invaluable should I wind up stuck somewhere for days, broken down or forced to stay and wait out the elements, or hope that someone would notice I was missing and send help.

One of my favorite survival kits that I keep with me is a product made by a company called Ready Freddy. They have a kit that comes with just about everything you could ever need to survive out in the elements for a few days. The kit has everything from food, water, first aid items, flash light, cell phone charger (to call for help if you have a dead battery and a chance at a signal), a tool bag, rope, protective gear like ponchos, candles, matches, duct tape, and other survival intended items.

The Ready Freddy pack has it all and was designed as an easy transport backpack made from durable materials and capable of holding everything that I should ever need. In addition, the pack is made of five specially designed sections that will keep you prepared for anything.

You can always make your own survival type pack and hopefully will never need it; however, if you find yourself in the position of needing it just once, you'll be glad that you went prepared. One of my favorite beliefs and sayings is "I would rather have it and not need it than need it and not have it." The Ready Freddy is the one piece of equipment I have that I won't leave home without. Yep, my American Express of gear no doubt.

Ready Freddy website:

www.readyfreddy.com

